On Wednesday arrived the Government Messenger from Port Dalrymple, bringing the unpleasant intelligence of William Entwistle (a young man universally known to most of our Readers here) having been drowned on Friday morning the 24th instant, at the New River, opposite the farm of Mr. T. M. Sney, Port Dalrymple. The Government Messenger left town accompanied with Entwistle, and swam the river on his mare with the greatest difficulty, owing to the rapidity of the current, which was occasioned by an unexpected fall of rain from the adjacent mountains. The unfortunate man followed on an entire horse, who when in the current plunged to such a degree that Entwistle was thrown, and never since heard of.—This accident is peculiarly melancholy, owing to the universal respect and esteem in which this young man was held by the inhabitants of this Settlement. We have to add, that the Coroner of the county (T. ARCHER, Esq) gave every direction respecting the recovery of the body, which when the messenger left the Settlement was unavailable.
