

Police Reports. (1845, November 8). Bell's Life in Sydney and Sporting Reviewer (NSW : 1845 - 1860), p. 2. Retrieved January 23, 2022, from <http://nla.gov.au/nla.news-article59766998>

Police Reports.

—O—

FRIDAY.—James Reed, residing in Clarence-street, was charged by constable Tigh, with being drunk in that neighbourhood on the previous evening, and going through sundry evolutions with a knife, to the great danger of Her Majesty's lieges. Having professed contrition for his freak, together with a promise that he would "sin no more" backed by a good character, he was admonished and discharged.

FRIDAY.—James Reed, residing in Clarence-street, was charged by constable Tigh, with being drunk in that neighbourhood on the previous evening, and going through sundry evolutions with a knife, to the great danger of Her Majesty's lieges. Having professed contrition for his freak, together with a promise that he would "sin no more" backed by a good character, he was admonished and discharged.